An introduction to Tavistock

Gateway to Cornwall and West Devon mining World Heritage sites, Tavistock is a charming market town on the western fringes of Dartmoor National Park with a history dating back to at least 961 when Tavistock Abbey was founded.

Sir Francis Drake was born to the west of what is now Tavistock College, later making his home at nearby Buckland Abbey, now a National Trust property and museum to Drake.

The town's industry was founded on tin and copper mining. Visitors can take a stroll along the canal – opened in 1817 to carry copper to Morwellham Quay – one of the country's few mineral canals.

Tavistock is tied from late medieval times with the Russells, the family name of the Dukes of Bedford. A statue in copper of the 7th Duke stands in Guildhall Square. He was responsible for the dramatic remodelling of much of the medieval town during the mid 19th century with profits from his mines.

Today, Tavistock offers a bustling high street with a wealth of independent and boutique shops and vibrant Pannier Market, granted a Royal Charter in 1105. There is also a plentiful selection of cafes, pubs and bistros for enjoying everything from Cornish pasties to Devon Cream Teas.
